had been purating turned out not to be the woman they sought. The woman was found in a little house near Huntsville late yesterday afternoon by the two men. In some respects she answered the description given by Marte Biggs, friend of Smith and formerly a member of the theatrical company he led, but within a short time convinced the police that she was not "Goldie." Because of this fact, the Central office men would not give out her name last night.

Later in the night Marie Biggs, who revealed so much of Smith's life when he was a "theatrical angel," admitted she did not know where "Goldie" was.
"I never even said the Smith they have locked up is the same man I'm talking about," declared the girl sullenly. "I'm making no such statement now. The pictures they've shown me of Smith don't look a bit like the Smith I knew. It may all be a mistake."

Officials at the Home of the Good Shepberd, where the girl is housed, are positive that none of Smith's friends from the outside could have reached or influenced her. Yet the strange contradictions in testimony—her apparent desire to sond the police on the wrong trail—has caused the officials to investigate thoroughly into the possibility of a "gang arrangement," whereby no one who knows anything is to inform on the city, golus, among other places, on a tour through Southwest Washington which enabled them to find the woman they had been shadowing. And it was only to learn that she was not the woman they wanted.

Every effort is being made now to develop the evidence in the Mickle case. Yesterday afternoon Morris Bennet, whom Smith is accused of murderously assaulting, identified the suspect for the third time, as the man who attacked him. Bennet, who is unable to speak, was walking slowly up and down his room in Casualty Hospital, when a detective, with one of the physicians, entered and showed him a Bertillon picture of Smith. guard the Methodist mission near the legation quarter in Pekin. The detail was made at the request of Minister Calhoun. Arrangements have been made for a gathering of 140 American missionaries in the Methodist mission for protection in case of necessity.

he half staggered to a chair.

There he held the picture aloft, nodding his head visorously as questions of its identity were put to him.

"Is there any doubt that this is the man?" Bennet was asked finally. He shook his head.

Hennet, the physicians say, will receve his speech within a few weeks. The shattered bone of the law must knit, and then it is believed that he will give further information on the whole matter. Detectives believe it probable that Smith made some statement to Bennet which will aid in the case, as the two were no strangers.

Despite the fact that their first effort to find "Goldie" has resulted in nothing-principally through misinformation fursished by Smith's friends—the police hope that they will find the girl to-day. Her statement will be taken with that of other witnesses in the office of the district attorney.

The case of the government against Robert Davidson, who is charged with selling his nineteen-year-old wife. Edna Davidson, into "white slavery," was continued in court yesterday. To offset this statement, the police To offset this statement, the police were able to completely break Smith's story about having spent the night of the murder at the Walker home with Lawrence Britt. It was on Britt that Smith religd to substantiate his statements. Yesterday morning Walter Costello, proprietor of a saloon at Sixth and G streets northwest, informed the police that Britt and another man, generally answering the description of John Walker, had enter'd his barroom at 520 o'clock on Fraday morning and had hilariously told him of the "grand old time they had had the night before."
